Excerpt

Sam leaned forward, grabbing the chains of her swing in each of his hands before pulling her over to him - meeting her in the middle. Cameron caught her lower lip between her teeth and her eyes dropped to his lips, as she hoped - and waited - for him to kiss her. She'd been yearning to feel his lips on hers since he walked into the coffee shop and if he didn't do it soon she would take matters into her own hands.

He leaned a little closer, his lips barely more than an inch from hers and paused. The scent of soap and fresh linen surrounded her drawing her in. Cameron released one of the swing chains, trusting Sam to keep her steady and touched the side of his face, which was perfectly shaven and smooth.

Her eyes dropped again to his lips before closing the distance between them. She sighed as their lips touched. Cameron released the other chain and pressed the palm of her second hand to his chest.

She brushed her lips across his and then nipped at his lower lip. He growled softly, a low feral sound, stirring her arousal as he parted his lips inviting her to explore more deeply. Her tongue lashed at his lips and when he opened his mouth slightly, she deepened the kiss. She moaned softly against his mouth as their tongues touched.

this is a great story about going after something and finding out there is so much more you can have. Cameron and Sam are two broken people who are just looking to find someone who can love them for the long haul. Cameron however has decided the way to find the love she wants is to have a baby so she places a personal ad for people to discuss being the donor with her. Sam answers this add and find he doesn't just want to get Cameron pregnant he wants to have a baby with her. He is very determined to show Cameron she can have her baby and him too. Great store one I would definitely recommend.

Love this book

By JassyBooks

This book is so good in the book I seen it like my family story women freaking out if they aren't married with kids. But no thinks about doing it on their own they want the happily ever after but Cameron believes she will not find it but still wants a baby.

Cameron is a very successful club owner curvy sexy and is very strong women that takes care of herself. She didn't grow up with much barely saw her mom as a child because she worked so much so you see. Cameron doesn't have anyone. So when she put out an ad for a donor to have a baby she didn't think a guy like Sam.

Sam is a resident with big student loans but he comes from an awesome family who tight. He answered the ad because he knew how bad people want babies and can't do it he wanted to help. He was adopted so he understands the desire it have a child. But when he goes into the coffee shop to meet her he was so surprised ow he felt toward her..

So the story is beautiful and you have to read it absolutely love it couldn't put it down. Terry Towers did it again made me want more of her books.

A Very Pleasant Surprise!

By Ricky

The story begins with Cameron Seacrest, a woman who has just hit her thirtieth birthday; and although a successful owner of a nightclub, she has realized she is missing one thing: A child. Putting out an ad for the perfect donor - realizing she may not meet Mr. Right anytime soon - she sets up a meeting with a smoky blue-grey eyed hunk called Sam.

The author sets up the meeting and the characters really well, with a great perspective from the males point of view and Camerons point of view. Usually, most authors fail to do one or the other with skill, depending on their sex. But not in this case. There's also a lot of humor and some great sexy moments (before the other 'sexy' moments, I'm sure you know what I mean.) There are also smatterings of rich tension throught the story, which is great, not to mention a fair few twists and turns along the way that kept me involved right up to the end. In short, this is well worth your time. It's so much better than what I had expected, and I'll definitely be reading much more of Miss Towers work!
