Bob knows his subject-cars-undoubtedly very well and there can be NO argument that our corporate fascination with bean counters and their methods is troublesome for the auto and other manufacturing enterprises. However, when he ventures aside from his topic of expertise and proffers his close-minded take on climate change, he loses me and many other readers.

Yes, we all have First Amendment rights to free speech but we should also defer to experts in the respective fields. We acknowledge Bob's expertise in his field but disavow his rather narrow-minded stands on topics like climate change where the science is very well established.

Self annointed saviour of the auto industry.

By Rulon J. Black

Lutz must have hurt his arm patting himself on the back. He claims that whatever car company he worked for was in serious trouble until he saved it. He, and he alone, cleared out the deadwood and only he made it a better company. Oh also the elite media and grandstanding elected officials made the problem worse. He admits to no mistakes, casts blame on others and miminizes any residual impact he left behind. less about car guys vs. bean counters and more about the genius car ability of Bob Lutz. he occassionally lets some interesting information leak out but he spends a lot of time singing his own praises.

Outstanding Book

By H P Johnson

This books provides an outstanding lesson in the problems that can be caused when the bean counters are allowed to take charge of design and production decisions. Every MBA should read it.
